SUBJECT: Necropsy on Sonoran Pronghorn

CONVERSATION: I called to see how the necropsy on the Sonoran pronghorn, that had to be euthanized during the November capture, had gone and what the results were. DeVos said that two pathologists and other technicians were present. The conclusion was that one of the weights on the corner of the capture net had hit the pronghorn on the back and shattered the vertebrae on the right side. There was also trauma to the muscle on that side. Most of the internal organs were taken by various researchers. The heart was being sent to Dr. Ryder (in San Diego) for taxonomic/genetic work.
